Academic Regalia

Academic dress appeared in America in colonial days, and many of the regulations of British universities were transplanted to this side of the Atlantic.

Gowns

Gowns for baccalaureate degrees have a straight sleeve; master's gowns have sleeves with a slit for the arm and continue into a long oblong drape, and doctoral gowns have full rounded sleeves, frequently adorned with velvet. In the United States, gowns are typically black and worn closed.

Hoods and Caps

Originally used as a head covering, shoulder cap, or bag for collecting alms, the academic hood is retained today for the sake of tradition and symbolic effect. Students earning master's or doctoral degrees receive a hood signifying that achievement. Doctoral hoods are rounded, larger and longer with side panels. The hood's lining represents the official colors of the institution conferring the degree. Trim colors on doctoral hoods denotes the doctoral degree type.

The mortarboard is a descendant of the simple commoner's cap of medieval times. Over time, the cap's top was transformed into a stiff square. The name "mortarboard" comes from its similarity in shape to the square board used for mixing mortar. The tassel hangs over the left front quarter of the top.

Honor Cords and Stoles

Students may wear approved honor cords and stoles to signify achievement through academic honors, student organizations, or association with international groups or programs. Cords signify specific academic achievement or membership in a recognized academic honor group or society. Veterans and service members wear red, white and blue cords. Specialized stoles recognize outstanding service to the university or achievement in a co-curricular organization. Students may also wear the NSU stole.

The Mace and the Medallion

The mace is a symbol dating back to the creation of institutions. It initially belonged to the military, where its function was to bash open the enemy's armor. Later, the mace underwent Christian conversion and became a symbol of peace. The bishop who accompanied the King's forces into battle carried the mace, instead of the sword, to identify him as a man of peace. Later, both civil and university authorities adopted the mace as a symbol of authority, incorporating the authority of military power, as well as the heavenly power of the church.

Today, it is a symbol of the president's authority to carry out Northeastern's mission. It is a reminder that the pursuit of truth is both powerful and sacred. It represents learning not enforced by military power or coerced by threats of clerical inquisition; rather, it incorporates the concepts of teaching and learning within the forum of freedom. By tradition, the mace is carried in front of the president by a senior faculty member. Northeastern's mace was designed by members of this institution. It is a traditional European design and made of walnut. The staff is turned gradually from the base where it transitions to a square with brass plaques on each side. At the top edge, the staff is again turned to point and topped with a brass spike.

While the mace is the symbol of institutional authority, the medallion symbolizes the president's personal authority and is worn on the person. Even in the absence of the mace, the medallion stands as the embodiment of learning and the symbol of presidential office.
